September is National Preparedness Month

National Preparedness Month is an observance to raise awareness about the importance of preparing for disasters and emergencies that could happen at any time. There are several things all of us should have in place in the event we are faced with an emergency situation.

Have a plan: Emergency situations aren't considerate in their timing. They can happen when your family is not together, so it is important to know how you'll contact each other and reconnect if you are separated. Once your plan is assembled, and you have designated a family meeting place that's familiar and easy to find, it is important that your family members are aware of it and have practiced it. It is also recommended that everyone in the family is taught practical steps like shutting off the water and gas. Part of your plan should include a packing list so you know what you'll need in case the emergency requires you to evacuate quickly. Include overnight items, your most important possessions, as well as important documents, medications, and items required for your pet's well-being.

Build a kit: Have a collection of essential items you may need in the event of an emergency. Be sure to include staples like water, food, a hand-crank radio, a first aid kit, and flashlights. If you already have an emergency kit, it's a good idea to check it annually to ensure all the items are still ready for use. Visit Ready.gov for a complete list of supplies needed for a basic disaster kit.

Sign up for NoCo Alerts: Visit Nocoalert.org and sign up to have alerts come directly to your phone. The sooner you are alerted to danger, the more time you will have to prepare for evacuation, and the better your chances of survival.

Visit Ready.gov for information on how to be prepared for any emergency situations.
